The Laws of Road Food:

1. The Billboard Law: When a restaurant mounts an expensive and repetitive billboard campaign that reads "30 miles to Indian Joe's ... 20 miles to Indian Joe's ...5 miles to Indian Joe's ..." -- accelerate upon reaching Indian Joe's.
2. The Barnyard Law: You will never go hungry in a restaurant that features a huge plastic barnyard animal out front or on the roof.
3. The Altitude Law: The quality of food is in inverse proportion to a dining room's altitude, especially atop bank and hotel buildings (airplanes are a notable example).
4. The Dishwasher Law: Contrary to popular notion, truck drivers know nothing about good restaurants. If you want a reliable tip, drive into a town and seek out a dishwasher repair man. He spends a lot of time in restaurant kitchens and will have strong opinions about them.

An engineer, a doctor, and a priest were sentenced to execution by guillotine. The priest was made to go first, and he asked permission to lie face up so that he could face his Maker as he died. The request was granted, the blade was dropped, and lo and behold, it stopped just above the priest's neck. Believing that he had seen a miracle, the executioner freed the priest. The doctor's turn was next, and he decided to lie the same way. The blade was dropped, and again it stopped. Thus, the doctor was also freed. The engineer was to die next, and he also lay face up on the guillotine as the observers waited for another miracle. Just before the blade was dropped, the engineer cried out, "Wait! I think I see the problem!!!"

Lexicon of Inconspicuously Ambiguous Responses (LIAR), a program for (not) recommending job candidates:

- In my opinion, you will be most fortunate to get this person to work for you.
- All in all, I cannot say enough good things about this candidate to recommend him too highly.
- I would urge you to waste no time in making this candidate an offer of employment.
- I am pleased to say that this candidate is a former employee of mine.
- I most enthusiastically recommend this candidate with no qualifications whatever.
- I can assure you that no person would be better for the job.

For some people, the opposite of talking isn't listening, it's waiting.
